

Developing a Department Faculty Mentoring Plan Updated February 2, 2023

Increasingly faculty face a multitude of responsibilities, an expectation of greater autonomy relative to financial and staff support, and continuously evolving directives, expectations, and leadership structures. Thus, formal mentoring programs for faculty at all career stages are more essential today than ever. Developing a departmental plan to provide the mentoring appropriate for a given discipline, for all faculty career stages, and the missions for the department and college should involve both leadership and faculty from all ranks and titles. Furthermore, leadership and faculty should familiarize themselves with the evidence-based practices associated with successful mentoring. Mentorship within the academic culture can aid in building successful careers for faculty and students, develop intellectual and professional networks, and provide mentors with educational opportunities to further develop their roles. This resource was developed to guide departments as they create formal mentoring plans, allowing them to both evaluate existing approaches and reimagine needed components in the context of the evidence-based literature. There is no prescription intended with this resource, rather it is meant to serve as both a prompt for brainstorming, and a guide for available resources.

Evidence for Department Mentoring Plan	Questions for Consideration
1. Definition of mentoring (Science of Effective Mentoring in STEMM, 2019)	 How would you define mentoring in your department? Faculty Postdocs Graduate and professional students Undergraduate students Staff How are the definitions the same? Different?
2. Benefits of mentoring (Zellers, Howard, and Barcic, 2008; Science of Effective Mentoring in STEMM, 2019)	 What is the benefit to a mentee? What is the benefit to the mentor? How is mentorship impact demonstrated and measured? What are the benefits for tenure-track faculty? What are the benefits for academic professional track (APT) faculty? What are the benefits of mentoring across faculty career stages?
3. Department mentoring purpose and goals (Carnegie Mellon; Michigan; Science of Effective Mentoring in STEMM, 2019)	 Why does a department mentoring program exist? Who is mentored and why APT Faculty (professional development) Assistant Professors (for tenure) Associate Professors (progression to Full) Associate and Full Professors (leadership and other continued skill acquisition) Who mentors the different career stages?

4. Department rationale for mentoring (Fountain & Newcomer; 2016; Carnegie Mellon; CIMER; Lunsford, Crisp, Dolan, & Wuetherick, 2017; Michigan; Orsini, Benge, & Carter, 2019; Science of Effective Mentoring in STEMM, 2019; Zellers, Howard, and Barcic, 2008)	 Mutorial Extension What types Career? 5. Mentorship Models (Bean, Lucas, & Hyers, 2014; California-San Francisco; Columbia; de Janasz & Sullivan, 2003; Harvard; Illinois; Michigan; North Carolina; Pope- Ruark, 2017; Sellers, Howard, & Barcic, 2008; Science of Effective Mentoring in STEMM, 2019)	Single Mentor	 How does this mentorship begin? When? What are the benefits for this mentorship model? Challenges? What is the plan if a single mentor may not be able to address all of a mentee's concerns?
	Group or Mutual Mentoring	 How does this mentorship begin? When? What are the benefits of this mentorship model? Challenges? What is the group structure? Senior members? Peer members? Is an external perspective or guidance valuable?
	Interdisciplinary Mentoring	 How are roles determined? Structure? Communication? Who gives scholarly advice? What discipline and perspective would be valuable? Is it possible for an external campus mentor to contribute?
	External and Expert Mentoring	 What forms of external mentorship is available inside and outside the college? External to the university? What is the value?

6. Role of Department & Leadership (Carnegie Mellon; Columbia; Fountain & Newcomer, 2016; Harvard; Michigan; North Carolina; Science of Effective Mentoring in STEMM, 2019)	 How can faculty engage with mentors who are subject-matter or discipline-specific experts? What is the value? How can faculty engage with mentors who are process experts? What is the value? How is a culture of mentoring promoted in the department? What review processes address mentorship outcomes of faculty? Is a mentorship award established? If not, should one? What mentorship information resources can be provided to faculty? How are faculty encouraged to participate in mentorship education and development? Where can they participate on campus? What faculty incentives and support can encourage faculty to participate? Are informal mentoring opportunities provided to all faculty, regardless of rank or experience? How often do I meet with the department mentoring point of contact?
	 What is necessary to ensure all faculty are receiving effective mentoring as described in the departmental mentoring plan?
7. Department Point of Contact (Harvard; Illinois; Science of Effective Mentoring in STEMM, 2019)	 Who will oversee the initiative? How frequent are mentor-mentee discussions? What is discussed? Will they serve in an evaluative capacity?
8. Clear guidelines and expectations for mentor and mentee (Carnegie Mellon; Science of Effective Mentoring in STEMM, 2019; Wilson & Elman, 1990; Zellers, Howard, and Barcic, 2008)	 What is the timeline? As soon as faculty join the department as part of onboarding? Who participates? What does participation include? Meetings? Frequency? Informal or formal? Is there an agreement between mentor and mentee? If yes, how was it initiated and what does it include? What happens if the mentor leaves the department/university? How long is the commitment? Is there a multi-year plan? Who schedules the meetings? How will confidentiality be maintained? What are the guidelines for meetings? What is the emotional support expectation for mentoring?
